Walk Like a Man
 (SBS, 7.30pm)

GREAT timeslot for this documentary on a tough Sydney rugby union team which travels to New York for an international match. Oh, and they're a gay team. There's also interesting player profiles including a lesbian going against her religious parents.

Watch for: gay athletes talking about the homophobia that keeps sportsmen and women in the closet. "There are gay players on every team in the world, it's just a lot of time their fellow teammates don't know about it," one says.

Ramsay's Boiling Point

(Channel 7, 10pm)

TEN years ago, when this was filmed, Gordon Ramsay was fresh from being British chef Marco Pierre White's apprentice. These days the pair have fallen out, after Ramsay brought a reality-TV crew to White's wedding. But tonight Ramsay's still so keen for White's approval (hello Dr Phil!) he calls him when undercover French diners from the team who hand out Michelin stars arrive at his restaurant.

Watch for: a vintage Ramsay kitchen nightmare towards his staff.

Ladette to Lady

(Channel 9, 9.30pm)

MELBOURNE loves their ladettes, so Nine has dusted off 2004 episodes of the British reality show. Rachel Carter Eagleton may have the double-barrelled surname, but she's a slapper who can't keep her hands out of gentlemen's pants. Tonight she and her fellow ladettes get a posh hair makeover, but Rachel cries because she looks like Margaret Thatcher.

Watch for: the girls having bra fittings to fix a "bop situation". They're told "once gravity calls, that's it".

Wipeout

(Channel 9, 7.30pm)

WHO saw this one coming? Nine has a surprise ratings hit with this US remake of the R's a Knockout format. It's one Ten has been doing for years — though less successfully — on Friday Night Live. Maybe we like seeing egotistical Americans falling in water and getting on the wrong side of the 'big balls' — cue plenty of Kevin "Bloody" Wilson-style jokes.

Watch for: that snide commentary — like Terry Wogan at Eurovision, only less witty.
