

WHAT TO WATCH

Walk Like A Man

SBS, 7.30pm

As the All Blacks and the Wallabies battle it out for the Bledisloe Cup, this enjoyable doco tells the story of another, lesser known rugby union tournament. The Bingham Cup is a competition between the world's best homosexual rugby teams. It was named after gay rugby player Mark Bingham, who perished aboard United Airlines Flight 93, on September 11, 2001, after bravely trying to thwart the terrorists. Former rugby league star-turned-actor Ian Roberts, the first Australian footballer to publicly come out, narrates as the San Francisco Fog and the Sydney Convicts compete for the 2006 trophy.

Ladette To Lady

Nine, 9.30pm

The ladettes who are shuffled off to a 1950s-style finishing school all seem quite charming, even if they do enjoy booze, smokes and lewd behaviour a little too much. Their teachers, on the other hand, seem to get away with rudeness

DON'T MISS

Wipeout

Nine, 7.30pm

It seems obstacle course shows are cool again. This it's a Knockout-style import from the US sees 24 hopefuls each week tackle a course featuring challenges such as high-speed treadmills, giant bouncing balls, spinning mechanisms and a wall from which arms pop out and throw punches. At the end of the series the last competitor wins $50,000. Hosted by John Anderson, John Henson and Jill Wagner (pictured).

simply because they speak with toffee-nosed accents. Etiquette expert Liz Brewer has been known to loudly describe an unfortunate girl as "slutty" to guests at dinner parties.

The Wrong Arm Of The Law

ABC1, 12.35am, G (1963)

A band of cockney thieves led by Pearly Gates (Peter Sellers) operates a burglary ring behind the facade of a high-fashion clothing boutique. Spectacular robberies are carried out by these thugs until a rival band of Australian crims pose as police officers and confiscate their stolen loot. One of the last British comedies from what many consider "the golden age" of its genre. ★★★
